1. Introduction

Our project focuses on the website "Siam Florist," a prominent online flower delivery service operating in Thailand and worldwide. The website offers a diverse range of fresh flowers and plants, including roses, orchids, tulips, carnations, and lilies, categorized for events like birthdays, anniversaries, thank you notes, and get well wishes. Additionally, they provide gourmet gift baskets filled with fresh fruits, gourmet food, chocolates, and candies. The core mission of "Siam Florist" is to enable customers to connect and convey their feelings to loved ones by offering an extensive selection of beautiful flowers and arrangements, coupled with exceptional customer service.

While examining the website, we encountered several usability issues and challenges. The primary objective of selecting this website for our project is to address these usability problems within the user interfaces. It's challenging for users to navigate and utilize a website when it's plagued with these issues. Consequently, our team has decided to redesign the site to rectify these interface flaws and enhance user-friendliness, ultimately improving the overall user experience.

2. Methodology

The project aimed to revamp the web-based application "Siam Florist" for a more appealing and user-friendly experience. To achieve this, the project involved collecting and analyzing data to identify usability issues. Data was gathered through in-depth interviews with contextual inquiries and video transcripts, providing insights into users' emotions, feelings, and opinions about the web application's interfaces.

Upon analyzing the video transcripts, Human-Computer Interaction principles were applied to address the identified usability issues. Before creating high-fidelity prototypes for the web application's interfaces, sketching was conducted as a crucial step. Sketching is a technique often utilized by designers in web and graphic design projects, and in this project, low-fidelity prototypes were sketched using the Mock Flow Wireframing Tool. High-fidelity prototypes were designed collaboratively using the Figma prototyping tool, which is a vector graphics editor known for its ability to create detailed and user-friendly prototypes.

4. Summary

This project was undertaken to redesign the selected user interfaces of the siamflorist.com website in a user-friendly manner and overcome the usability issues to provide a better user experience for the users. We have selected twenty (20) user interfaces including the home page, my cart, contact us, about us, and account dashboard pages to facilitate high-fidelity prototypes.

Human-Computer Interaction concepts were used in the designing process, and user-friendly colours, standard font sizes and standard button sizes were used without making any modifications to the identity of the brand. All the changes we have made for the interfaces were done to improve user satisfaction. So, users can easily get the services they need, and they can find the information quickly as per their requirements.

5. Future Work

The scope of this project was limited in terms of designing only the selected user interfaces of the chosen web application. There were so many other user interfaces in the chosen web application and a more expansive study may wish to redesign all those user interfaces in order to overcome the usability issues and maximize the user experience.

Future work could also be conducted to implement the CRUD (insert, read, update, and delete) operations since the chosen web application has some bugs in CRUD. As an example, updating the shopping cart is not functioning accurately. Therefore, future work can be focused on implementing the backend for this web application as well as the frontend.

As per the user feedback from the contextual inquiry, we suggest that the QR code on the home page which is connected to Line App should be changed to another social media app (e.g., WhatsApp) which is used worldwide since this website delivers flowers and gifts to overseas countries.

There are several important changes which need to be made in this web application but since we are not supposed make to any modifications to the existing brand's identity, we could not accomplish them. As an example, the logo of a brand should be an impressive and attractive one but, on this website, the brand logo is a primary, simple, and unimpressive one. Therefore, as a group, we suggest redesigning the brand logo in a proper way according to their theme without making any severe damage to the brand's identity in the future.

Future work is needed to fully complete the web application with frontend and backend with functional CRUD operations. So, this web application will be user-friendly, effective, and easy to use.
